GRANDVIEW PUBLIC MARKET

WEST PALM BEACH

Groovy warehouse districts aren't only for the gentrified urban cores of faded industrial cities. They're springing up in tony beach towns, too. Witness Grandview Public Market. The renovated mid-century warehouse sprawls across 14,000 square feet in West Palm Beach, offering a wide array of appetizing options from some 15 vendors, including the Hawaiian-style fare of Poke Lab Eatery and full-service butcher Grace's Fine Foods. There is a weekly night market, a roster of ongoing events for children, and workshops on such topics as pickling and gardening.

SAILS

NAPLES

Co-founding entrepreneurs Veljko Pavicevic and Corinne Ryan opened Sails on Valentine's Day, expressing their mutual affection for food and wine around the globe. The coastal cultures of Europe aren't too remote from that of the "other" Naples on Florida's own coastline. Guests are invited to select their own fish and choose from multiple styles of preparation, whether that's a seafood tower of raw delights, crudo with a Sails twist, or specialties cooked over a wood-burning grill. Steak and pasta dishes are also on the menu. As for ambience, decor elements were directly influenced by artisans of Greece, Portugal, France and Italy.

BEACH HOUSE

POMPANO BEACH

Infusing Pompano Beach with a megadose of boho-chic, this two-story oceanfront restaurant and bar, situated next to the soon-to-be-revamped Pompano Beach Pier, offers a quintessential Florida experience. Bamboo lanterns sway in the breeze, which flows from the porch through the open first-floor dining room. Upstairs, bungalow-style alcoves offer private perches from which to overlook the ocean. Cocktails like the all-natural pops and prosecco come garnished with mini house-made fruit pops. Stir up tropical magic to go with fresh Florida seafood.

THE ROYAL POINCIANA PLAZA

PALM BEACH

History goes deluxe at this signature Palm Beach shopping center. The site first opened in the late 1950s, famously designed by John Volk in an architectural style that echoes the Palais Royal in Paris. The 180,000-square-foot property was restored both to its former glamor and given contemporary touches by Smith and Moore Architects and Nievera Williams Landscape Architecture. The Plaza has drawn a host of more than 20 retail shops offering everything from fresh produce to doggy treats and Hermes scarves to motorbikes. Dining options include restaurants such as Sant Ambroeus, the Palm Beach Grill and Coyo Taco, with award-winning Mexican fare. Even if you've maxed out your credit cards, you can still enjoy the lush life in one of the Plaza's pair of courtyards, sipping a coffee amid the beautifully cultivated gardens.
